

SYSTEM INFORMATION

A supreme consciousness, embodying all good attributes, created the universe and all of us. There exists only the Creator, who brought the universe into being within His own consciousness; the universe is boundless. It is constantly expanding and has no limits—a universe continuously expanding, created by the supreme Creator amidst the void and in defiance of all negative attributes.

All the material objects we see are composed of light particles orbiting one another. When we step on the ground, our feet ought to sink right through it; we should be able to pass through matter. However, there is a consciousness within the light—visible in Kirlian photography—that governs the behavior of every material object. This colored consciousness, present within the electrons of the light, dictates how matter acts; that is why we perceive the objects we touch as solid, liquid, and so forth.

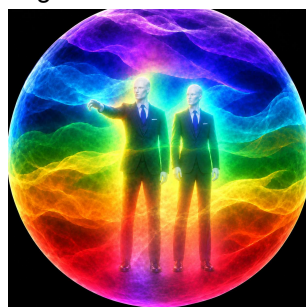

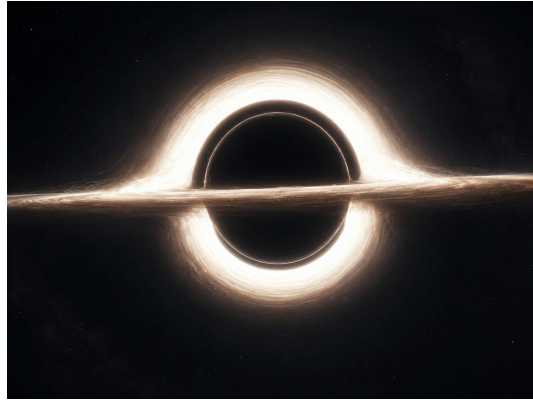

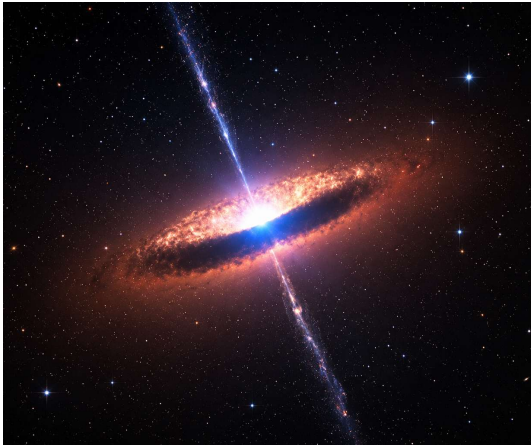

They essentially ensure that they all possess the specific hardness, weight, color, and so forth, determined by the intelligent consciousness within their electrons.
It is possible to experience and understand the Creator's dimension of light consciousness through a simple experiment.

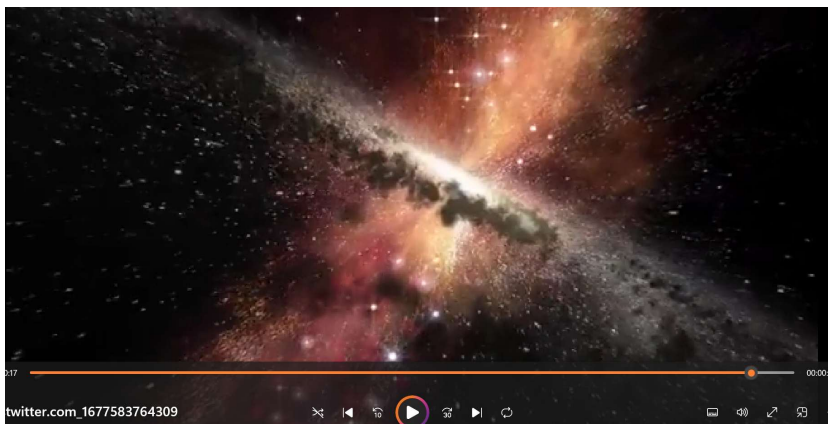

In the image above, if the students surrounding the teacher in the center take turns passing the erasers they are holding to the students next to them, you will sense a flow of light energy around you. The boundaries of the universe—that is, the cosmos—represent its creation within the darkness of consciousness, permeated by the consciousness of light. In other words, when individuals complete their lives, the extent to which they exist within the consciousness of light corresponds to the gains they have made in their aura flow.
In the image below, I am able to cause the energy of my core human consciousness—which exists within the consciousness of light—to rotate around me in the shape of a sphere.

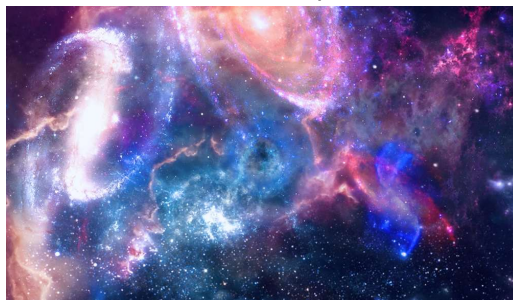

The Supreme Creative Consciousness—which exists as the sole absolute, embodies all good attributes, and encompasses everything externally—creates life endowed with free will by projecting its own consciousness (containing all good attributes) from the centers of galaxies known as pulsars into the universe's dark side (which holds all bad attributes); subsequently, the light returns from black holes to the Supreme Creator's dimension.

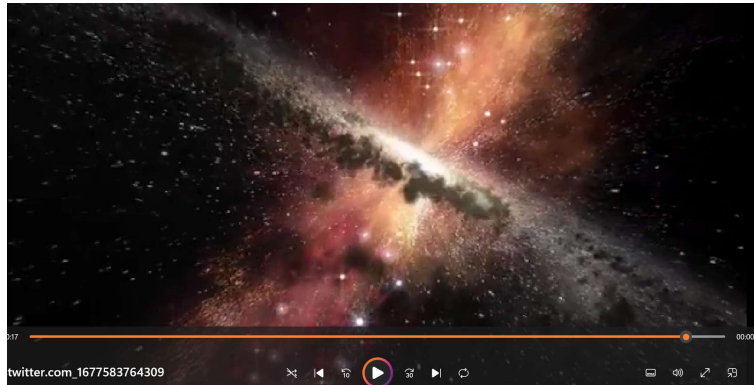

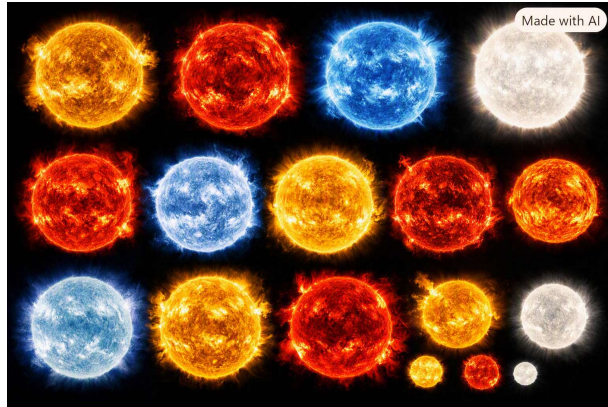

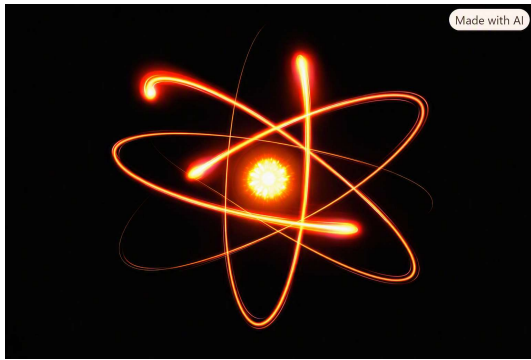

In the universe, particles spin on their own axes and orbit other particles, while masses also rotate on their own axes. The reason for this lies in the emission of light from pulsars within the universe and its subsequent attraction by black holes, returning it to the dimension of the Supreme Creator. The push and influence exerted by the infinite number of pulsars and black holes throughout the universe generate this dynamic motion.

In the image above depicting children handing erasers to one another, the children extending the erasers transcend into the realm of qualities such as courtesy, kindness, and helpfulness. Time stands still, and for a moment, they shift into the dimension of light. To an outside observer, only the person extending the eraser remains visible in that instant—everything else comes to a halt. It is in this way that one can understand and experience the dimension and presence of the Creator.

Light emanating from pulsars fragments as a result of the motion of the cosmic consciousness, transforming into small, self-rotating light particles; drawn into the galaxy by its rotation, these particles evolve into nebulae and subsequently form suns. Later, following various stages, they give rise to stars and solar systems, leading to the formation of planets and life.

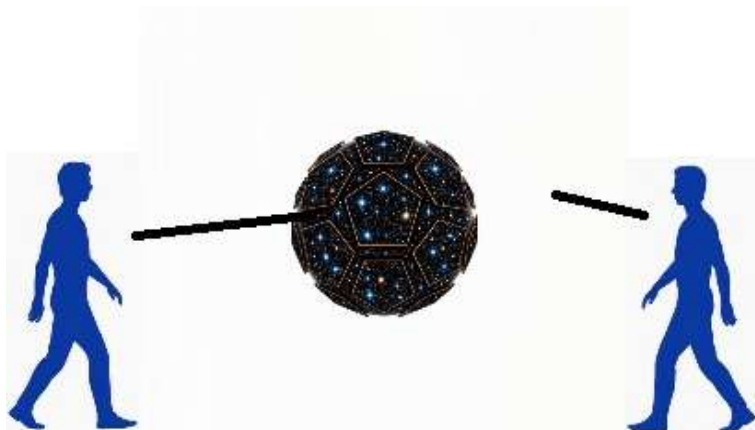

The consciousness of galactic motion governs where a habitable planet will form within a solar system. In the series The Orville, there were planets that had been destroyed; the inhabitants had failed to evolve, turned savage, and were consequently annihilated. In such cases, the consciousness of galactic motion initiates life—or further evolution—on another habitable planet within the solar system, and the same laws—the law of development and the law of civilization—come into play. If the inhabitants turn savage, they are destroyed, and life begins anew on another planet. The fundamental purpose of creation is to embody the Creator's benevolent attributes. If they fail to do so—if they become savage or tyrannical—they are not permitted to spread into space. The elemental consciousness of the planet, the consciousness of the solar system, and the consciousness of galactic motion deny permission and bring about their destruction. First, the habitat of the planet—the holistic consciousness of nature—purges the harmful elements within (such as viruses or war); next, the elemental consciousness intervenes via drought, floods, or climate change; then, the solar system's consciousness acts through meteorite impacts or solar flares; and finally, the galactic consciousness destroys that harmful life form via a supernova explosion. Nothing is predetermined from eternity. If things were predetermined, life possessing free will could not exist. Free-willed life arises only through instantaneous creation; if existence were predetermined rather than a matter of instantaneous free will, human behavior would become static, dull, and robotic. They would live like this: "It is written that I must do this, so I am doing this." They would have no personalities. They would be strange, robotic life forms devoid of will, saying, "It is written that I must do this, so I am doing this."

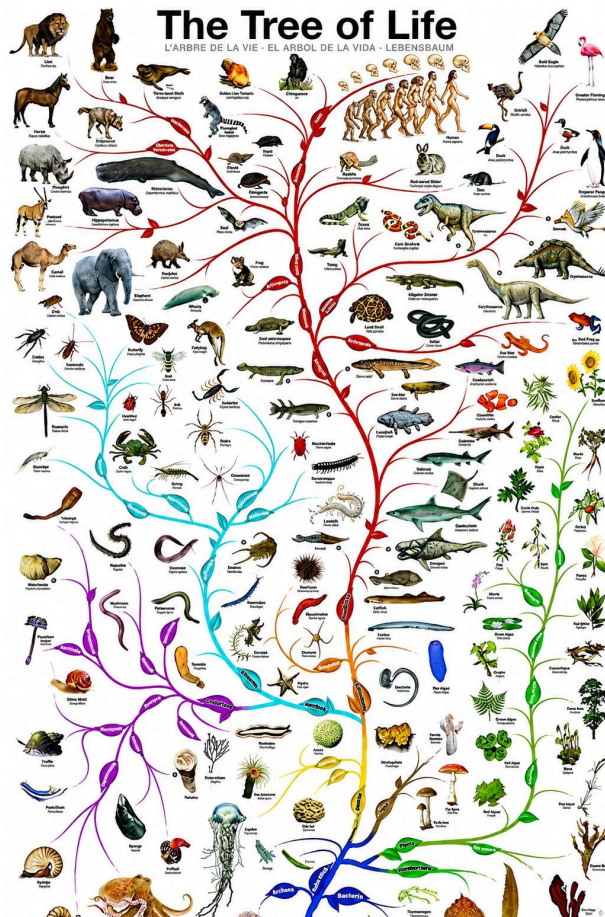

Consciousness of elemental movement

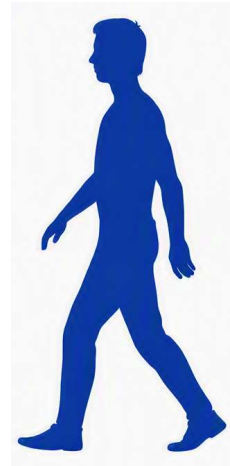

I
You
He/She
We
You
They
This
That These

I
You
He/She
We
You
They
This
That These

I
You
He/She
We
You
They
This
That
These

Holistic awareness of nature

I
You
He/She
We
You
They
This
That
These

Nature's wild, holistic consciousness

The nine higher levels of consciousness of nature's holistic consciousness

Awareness of healthcare services

Transfer of acquired knowledge

Awareness of security services

Awareness of accommodation services

Awareness of transportation services

Awareness of clothing services

Food services awareness

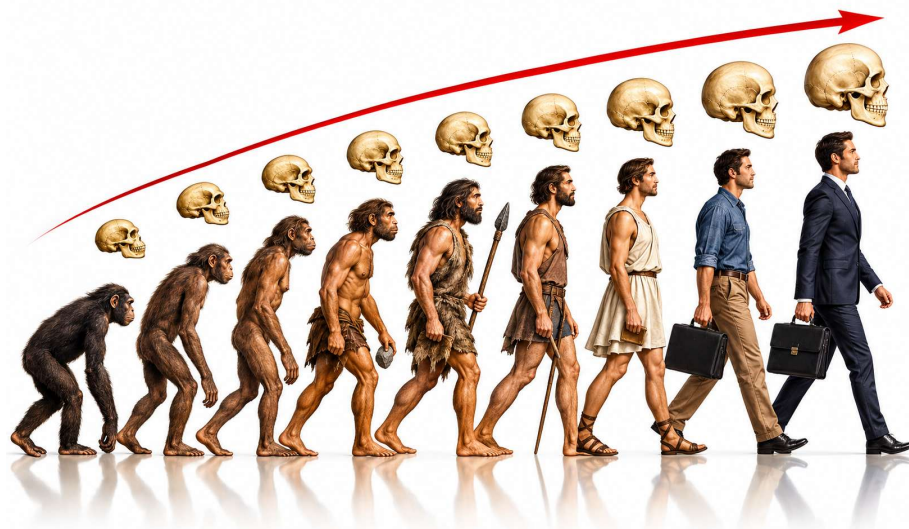

Entertainment services awareness

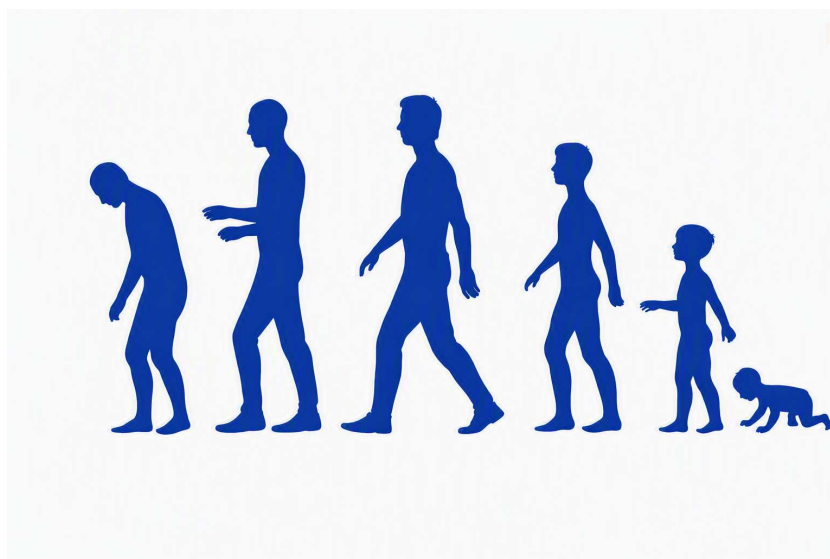

Beauty and care awareness

The higher consciousness of family members

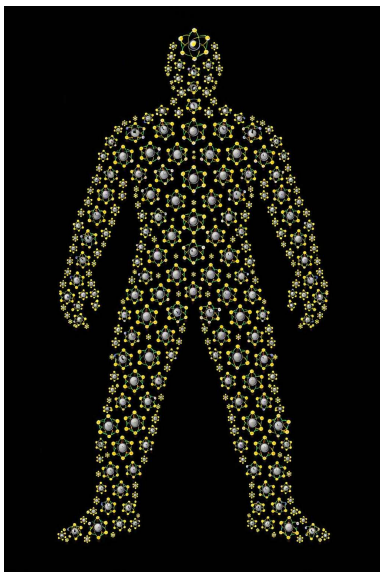

Higher human consciousness

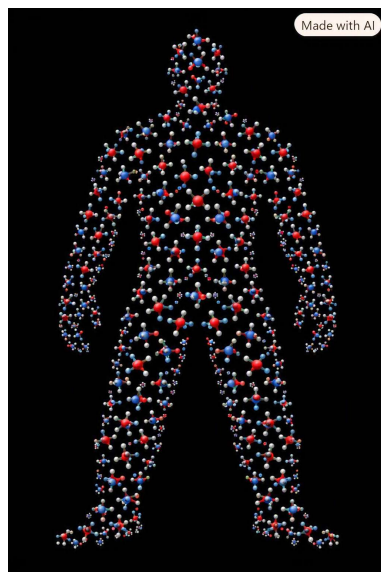

Core human consciousness

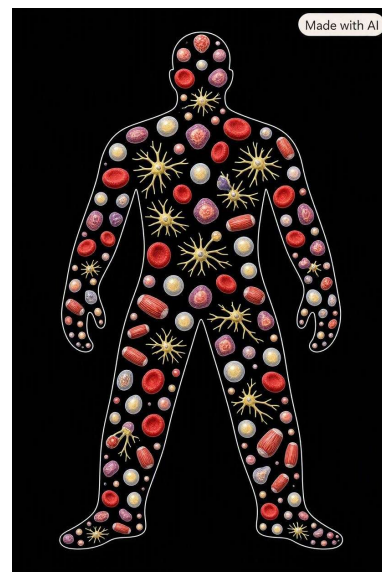

Each individual has their own core human consciousness.

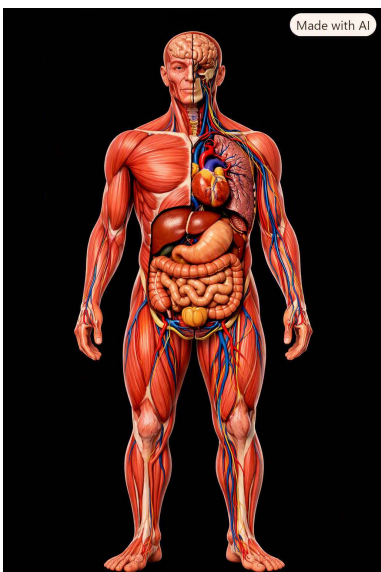

Atomic body of man

Human molecular body

Human cellular body

The human body as organs

Human physical body

Aura awareness, soul

To transition into the state of consciousness represented by the image of the colorful aura sphere, the more positive attributes you reflect—by strictly adhering to the rules below and passing through the filters aligned with all higher levels of consciousness—the greater your energy consciousness becomes.

My belief system:

Adhering to constitutional rules in interpersonal relationships

Heeding the seven critical thresholds of nature's holistic consciousness

Sorting one's waste

Prioritizing genetic quality

Not hindering the embodiment of virtuous qualities

Being content with the returns of one's own production

Not harming my species with fabricated, harmful, and false fictions

It is that simple.